

J. Moffett Walker, a resident of Clinton, was born and reared in rural Edwards, Mississippi. She earned a Bachelor's degree from Jackson State University, Jackson, Mississippi, a Master's degree in Personnel and Guidance from Purdue University, Hammond, Indiana, and completed an additional 30 hours of coursework at Indiana University, Bloomington, Indiana. During her elementary school years, she became fascinated with putting words together and rearranging those same words to express different thoughts and feelings. Her parents (who taught her in the elementary grades), her husband, and her three sons all encouraged her to pursue her writing dreams. Moreover, the late Dr. Margaret Walker Alexander inspired her to write, and the late Professor Charles Tinkham motivated her to publish. She currently enjoys speaking to book clubs, schools, churches, and other social groups about writing.

Ms. Walker cherishes having had the opportunity to teach English and social studies in McComb, Mississippi, and English and reading in Pine Ridge, South Dakota on an Indian reservation. In Gary, Indiana, she taught English for several years and counseled middle school students for 29 years. Walker founded the Gary Writers' Workshop and helped four writers to publish their works. The author comments that: "Writing is a gratifying art I truly love to share." You may e-mail her at: threesons333@aol.com.

PUBLICATIONS:

- The Powerful Web of Kinfolk (Publish-America, 2006)
- Muh (Cork Hill Press, 2005)
- Church Folk (Author House, 2001)
- The Mississippi I Love (E-BookTime,LLC, 2007)
- Muh's Cookbook: Recipes 1930 And Before (T J Company, 2009)

OTHER CREDITS:

Walker contributed two short stories to Life in the Good Old Days (Hometown Memories Publishing Company, 2005). She writes for the Clinton News and the Jackson Advocate. She has written speeches for public officials, relatives, and friends, historical records for her paternal and maternal families, and other materials for numerous charitable organizations.